

The Visitor

APRIL 2020

He Is Risen

As we make our way toward Easter, we are certainly living in uncharted waters. To say that our world has changed over the past few weeks is an understatement. For many of us, it seems unthinkable to not be able to gather with our church family each week in worship. And the possibility of celebrating Resurrection Sunday from our homes seems impossible.

Yet the reality of Jesus' Resurrection is what makes such difficult times possible. The Messiah has conquered death once and for all. And because of this, we can rest in his provision in these most trying times.

If we are struggling with fear of sickness or job loss, God is with us. Perhaps it is the shift in schedules or even missing important in-person relationships that are weighing on us. In all of this, Jesus' resurrection reminds us that He will see us through.

Sermon on the Mount Series

Throughout the season of Epiphany, we moved quickly through parts of Matthew's Gospel. In February, we spent a few weeks in what we call The Sermon on the Mount. Following one of these sermons, a college student came up and asked why I did not preach longer. I rarely get this sort of feedback. Most are glad to not linger in church. But she wanted more explanation around this difficult passage. Her comment prompted me to consider a longer study in Matthew 5-7. Following Resurrection Sunday, we will begin an extended series on The Sermon on the Mount. I think you will find the topics pertinent to life in 2020. We will cover topics like anger, lust, divorce, making promises, revenge, loving our enemies, prayer, fasting, money, worry, and judging others. I look forward to delving into these passages with you. — Wade

Gatherings Canceled in April

With the support of the CCT, Pastor Wade and chairman of the diaconate, Brian Green, made the decision to cancel in-person worship services through April 26. We will make sure that shut-ins and those without access to online services receive a mailed copy of each sermon.

We have decided to close the church office until April 8, as ordered by the latest state mandate. We will update our church voicemail to provide other ways to contact the church if necessary. We will decide how to proceed after this time as information becomes available.

All building usage by any group will be discontinued through the month of April. This includes weddings, funerals, music rehearsals, outreach programs, etc.

Communications Team

A team of FBC members are working on a plan to streamline the communication process, to make the Sunday bulletin more user-friendly and to create a feature format for the monthly Visitor.

Julie Davis and Molly Flodder, both members of the editing team for church publications, Colleen Massoth, church clerk, and Pastor Wade Allen attended a communication workshop hosted by the Center for Congregations earlier this year. The speaker, a pastor from New York City, offered many ideas for maximizing social media and providing ways to enhance communications in regular church vehicles. "One of the things we are working to do is to make the Visitor more of a feature format, running more lengthy stories about our members and the people of our church and their joys, struggles and participation in the life of the church," said Wade Allen. "Another change is that our bulletin will be easier to access with a calendar of upcoming events."

These are only a few of the communications' alterations that people will see as the year progresses. If anyone has ideas as the group moves forward, please contact a member of the team.
